Carbon dioxide laser therapy has become an integral component of the ophthalmic surgeon's armamentarium. It is used to treat a variety of ocular and extraocular conditions, and is well tolerated. It is capable of delivering thermal damage to cutaneous and ocular structures. When used on the eye, it can also be used to initiate a treatment of herpes simplex infections. This paper describes the laser's unique ability to improve and maintain the results of this treatment, and the mechanisms by which it accomplishes this. The National Union of Students has suspended the Cambridge Student Association (CSA) after its president, Neena Verma, announced she would not stand for re-election next week. Verma, who is a second-year MA student at St John's College, had been tipped to be the first Muslim woman to hold the position and to represent the interests of the Muslim community on campus. She is the vice president of the NUS and was supported by fellow students for re-election. Despite this, some students claimed that the president of St John's College gave verbal assurances to them that she would not be re-elected, therefore "lying through a proxy". In response, Verma announced on Facebook that she would not be seeking re-election due to the "vexatious attacks" she received from students who "constantly hounded" her for various reasons. "All of the attacks have veered around the fact that I am Muslim, which isn't about me but about an entire community. The attacks have also led to rumours on what the money coming from the NUS [and] the university administration means," she wrote. Although no allegations have been made against Verma, the NUS has accused the president of St John's of "disgraceful conduct" for allegedly telling students who approached her about their concerns that they would not be guaranteed a seat on the board of the student association. In a statement made to the Cambridge Student newspaper, the student association said it would be appointing a new president within ten days. "We are sympathetic to the issues that she faced, but we have a responsibility to uphold and enforce the constitution for NUS. It's the proper body to make these f678ea9f9e
